Dear Mr. Proctor:

I am new to Main Campus after teaching only at the Clearfield Campus (and here for a year as an instructor). Amid getting to know Main Campus, the one thing that, in my opinion, could use some attention is the Eagle Wing Snack Bar -- both the kitchen (area where food is ordered) and, especially, the dining area. The food is good and the staff polite and helpful, but the atmosphere is really "institutional" for lack of a better word. With so much time put in to making the campus warm and inviting (offices, classrooms, and the grounds in general) it seems a shame that a place where prospective students and their families might go to eat does not have that same feel to it. I am no interior designer, but the drab colors of the walls, floor, and seating, the lack of any art, plants, or decoration, and the harsh lighting do not lend themselves to a "haven" conducive to enjoying a meal and conversation.
